Many thanks to all those of you who got in touch last week and my apologies that I didn't get to reply before now....our PC which, was very old, finally gave up and had to be replaced this week. I am on the new one for the first time today and catching up with myself. Also hello to those who are new to the mailing list, hopefully I have added you all properly.

So home schooling and work is getting ever more complicated but happily we seem to have muddled through another week. The girls have filled spare time by custom painting their ukuleles and starting to learn some new songs on them. Phoebe has also helped to make some mosaic mirrors to go in our bathroom and hallway which was great fun. I've added a few pictures this week as a couple of people said they would like to see what the girls are up to and I've also added a pic of some macrame tree of life that we made last week. We are not very proficient yet but getting better I think. We like the idea of the bracelets you made at school Carole!

Next week Emily begins the process of choosing her GCSE options (doesn't seem possible that she is old enough!) which is not easy as she hasn't been in school to have the taster sessions of non core subjects as she usually would but I'm sure the school will help find creative solutions to this as they have with other areas. Please think of us and her as she makes her choices.

As always we are sending you all our best wishes and thinking of you. We hope you are all staying safe and well and we look forward to hopefully being able to see you again before too long.

Lots of love

Sarah, Tom, Emily and Phoebe xxxx
